Winfield, some relatives of the bride, and others. At first Mr. Messner objected to the union, unleash his intended fatherth-law hunded over $400, which he claimed had been promised as a marriage dower. On a sly suggestion made by one of the gentlemen present, John walved his claim, and Squire Watson performed the marriage ceremony, and at the conclusion demanded his fee of $2. The bridgeroom said he had not a cent, and appealed to his happy wife, but she was centless too. The relatives, after considerable searching, succeeded in scraping up ton cents, which was handed over to the Squire, who received it with a wry face, and the following remark its said to have been utered: "Well, Pill be d—of if this isn't commencing life pretty cheap." The wedding party then broke up. A TEN-CENT MARRIAGE .- John Messner of Jersey
